

The Essential Tenant's Guide

The Right-to-Rent Scheme

As part of the legal obligations landlords must adhere to when letting a property, the Home Office mandates that they perform a Right-to-Rent check for all prospective tenants and occupiers aged 18 or older who will reside in the rental property. This check is a critical step to ensure compliance with immigration regulations and confirm that individuals have the legal right to reside in the UK.

This comprehensive guide has been prepared to provide you with a clear understanding of the Right-to-Rent check process. By reviewing this information, you will gain valuable insight into what this procedure entails and how it may affect your rental application. Understanding these requirements will help you prepare for the necessary steps before moving into your new home.

What is the Check?

The Home Office requires that landlords carry out a Right-to-Rent check on any applicant regardless of their nationality and this will prove if an applicant is legally allowed to rent in England. This must be done before a new tenancy starts and the keys are handed over

There is a slightly different check depending on your nationality but everyone must go through at least one check. In this guide we will explain the process for British and Irish Citizens and the process for Non-British and Irish Citizens.

Landlords are not allowed to discriminate on who they let their property to based on their nationality, provided the applicant can prove their right-to-rent.

Who Has The Right To Rent?

Occupiers can fall into one of three different status categories when it comes to right-to-rent checks:

- Unlimited Right to Rent
- Time Limited Right to Rent
- No Right to Rent

Unlimited Right to Rent

This category is for people who have proven that they are allowed to rent in the UK for an indefinite period of time. Anyone in this category will not be required to have any follow up checks. It usually applies to:

- British/Irish Citizens
- People who have the right of abode in the UK
- People who have been granted an indefinite leave to remain or have no time limited on their stay
- Those with settled status via the Post-Brexit settlement scheme

Time Limited Right-to-Rent

This category is for people who have proven that they are allowed to rent in the UK but have a time limit on their stay. Anyone in this category will require follow up checks at the expiry of their stay or 12 months, whichever is longer.

It generally applies to people who do not fall into any of the above categories.

The length of their stay will depend on their reasons for entering the country, this could be for study, work or asylum to name a few.

Each situation is unique and will have different reasons behind them and varying rules apply for special situations such as the Windrush generation or refugees of the Ukrainian war.

No Right-to-Rent

All occupiers must prove their right-to-right prior to starting a tenancy. If they are unable to prove their right-to-rent they will be deemed as having no right-to-rent and a landlord would be at risk of civil penalty if they chose to let a property to them.

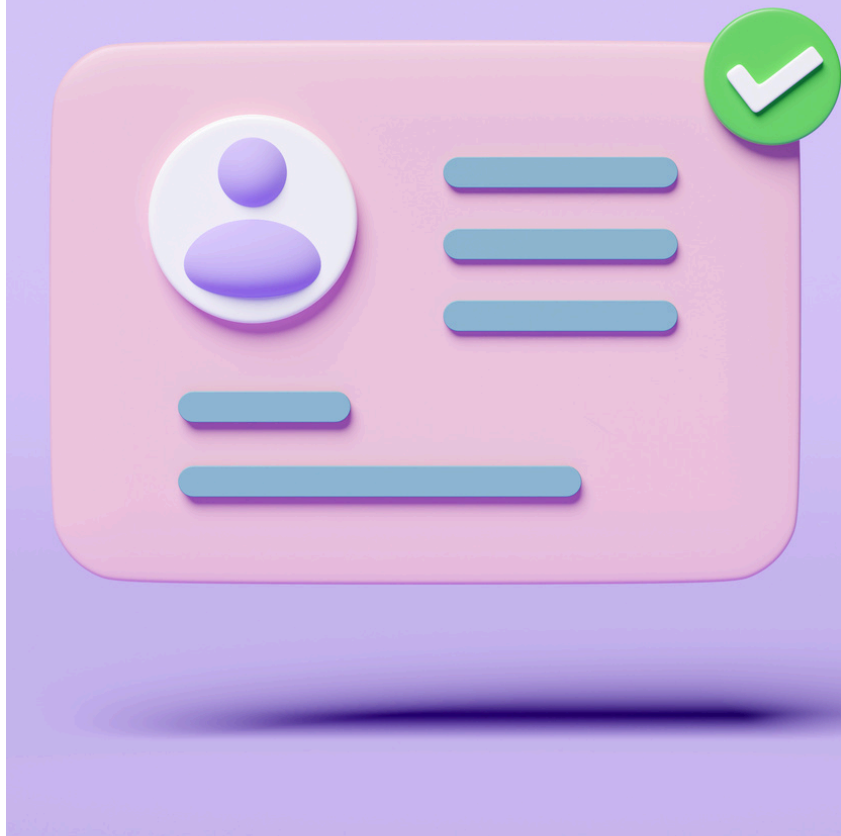

In the event an occupier can not provide sufficient evidence for a follow up check once a tenancy has started then they will have no right-to-rent and a report must be made to the Home Office

How Do I Prove My Right-to-Rent?

The most efficient and accurate way to prove your right-to-rent is using an online digital service:

British or Irish Citizens with a Passport can use government approved IDVT which can digitally certify their passport along with their biometrics via a selfie photograph. Once validated, this provides an unlimited right-to-rent and the report must be retained securely in hard copy or digitally. We currently use Yoti

Occupiers from other regions can use the online sharecode system whereby they can use their UKVI account, set up using visas, BRP cards and other immigration documents to provide you with a sharecode via the government service.

This code can then be shared with the landlord or agent and they will be presented with a profile page outlining the individual's right-to-rent and whether they have an unlimited or time limited right to rent.

In the event the occupier is going through the application process, they can provide their application number which can be run on the Landlord Checking Service.

As an alternative, you are permitted to prove your right-to-rent using physical documents. This primarily applies to British or Irish citizens but in some cases, time-limited right to rent can be proven through physical documents.

- A clear copy of both sides (or photo page in passport) will be taken and certified by writing 'the date on which this right to rent check was made [insert date]' on each copied document.
- A digital or hardcopy of each check will be stored securely.
